

Business Spotlight

The small business owner's retirement dilemma

You've poured a lifetime of sweat, time, and capital into building your business. You've begun thinking about retirement, and your strategy is to sell your company for a good price, settle back, and enjoy a financially secure retirement. But, like many business owners, you've made the mistake of assuming this scenario will happen, and you haven't bothered to make any other retirement plans.

You need to be realistic.

What are the odds of a person showing up at the right time with cash in hand to buy the company for a fair price? For thousands of small business owners each year, no one steps forward. Perhaps the business is too specialized or is tied too closely to the owner's unique personality and skills. Or maybe possible buyers equate retirement sale with a distress sale and make only low-ball offers. Whatever the reason, many owners find that their company has suddenly become a white elephant that nobody wants.

Here are some steps you should take:

1) Select and develop a successor.

It's important to prime a replacement—someone who will buy your company when you're ready to retire. Maybe this is a current co-owner (but be careful if he or she is about the same age as you, and planning to retire around the same time.).

Cody Hoppes of New York Life Insurance can evaluate your needs, assess your priorities and recommend solutions that help address your financial goals and objectives.

2) Offer incentives to ensure that your replacement stays until the baton is passed. An ambitious successor needs and deserves gradually increasing authority and benefits. Options include deferred compensation or the opportunity to acquire partial ownership prior to your retirement. This provides both parties with something to win by sticking to the agreement, and something to lose if it falls apart.

3) Create a buy-sell agreement. With the help of your attorney, lock in who does and gets what, spelling out all details and caveats, including how to establish the final valuation of the business. This formal agreement protects everybody.

4) Build in a funding mechanism. This is crucial. No matter how good the terms of the buy/sell agreement, it will be worthless if the money is not there when needed to carry out the plan.

Whether or not you have a possible successor for your company, you should begin mapping out your retirement strategy today. Perhaps we should talk? For more information please call me at 415-852-8828 or visit me online at www.codyhoppes.com